Campaign for Wool Statement on September 25th Guardian Article

The piece in the Guardian was a rehash of some rather odd, old news. Cruelty to animals in the wool growing countries of the world is a very serious crime and were it ever to be detected, would be dealt with instantly and severely. Over 500 companies working in wool, representing more than a million people employed in the industry, recommitted themselves to the highest standards of welfare by signing the Dumfries House Declaration in September 2016, which is available on line for all to see. Tolerance in the wool trade of anyone suspected of abuse is, and always has been, zero.
